TUESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 5.

MASSACHUSETTS POLITICS.—Says the New York Mail: "One of the most curious phases of the almost stagnant politics of the day is afforded in the contest for the Governorship of Massachusetts. A party that has an overwhelming majority; that contains scores of able men known throughout the Union, and that is in every respect fully organized, is apparently held at bay by the audacity of one man. Even most of those who assail General Butler appear to act as though they were tackling some monster of power who might read them from limb to limb, and the opposition to his pretensions is conducted with a painful degree of concert, as though nothing less than a movement along the whole line could succeed against his original, unprincipled and daring tactics. Looking at the game solely as such, and not from a political point of view, it seems strange that so many able politicians who hate or despise Butler should thus combine to magnify the public sense of his importance, resources and popularity."

Gen. Leggett, of the Pension Office, refuses to follow the custom of the other heads of the Government departments, and discharge his lady clerks who get married. The Detroit Tribune thinks that everybody ought to honor Gen. Leggett for this, for it asks, how can a woman be expected to support a husband if she is to be discharged from her situation as soon as she gets him?

Garibaldi is again out in eulogy of the Paris Commune and the International Society. He says:—"If the devil were to found a society for the purpose of putting down sovereigns and priests I would proudly enroll myself in its ranks." The priests probably believe that Garibaldi has already joined such a society.
